Friends of the Princeton University Library

The Friends of the Princeton University Library, founded in 1930, is an association of individuals interested in book collecting and the graphic arts, and in increasing and making better known the resources of the Princeton University Library. It secures gifts and bequests and provides funds for the purchase of rare books, manuscripts, and other materials that could not otherwise be acquired by the Library. Membership is open to those subscribing annually seventy-five dollars or more. Checks payable to Princeton University Library should be addressed to the Treasurer. Members receive the Princeton University Library Chronicle and are invited to participate in meetings and to attend special lectures and exhibitions.

THE COUNCIL

Nancy S. Klah, Chair
Alison Lahnston, Vice-Chair ★ Charles Heckscher, Secretary
G. Scott Clemons, Treasurer

2003–2006
Peter Bienstock ★ Joseph J. Felcone ★ Christopher Forbes
Richard M. Huber ★ Claire R. Jacobus ★ Alison Lahnston ★ John L. Logan
Judith D. McCartin Scheide ★ Rosemary O’Brien ★ Cynthia Penney
Dallas Piotrowski ★ Millard M. Riggs Jr. ★ W. Allen Scheuch n
Jennifer Scott ★ Ruta Smithson ★ Charles Barnwell Straut Jr.

2004–2007
Edward M. Crane Jr. ★ Donald Farren
Judith H. Golden ★ Charles Heckscher ★ Mark Samuels Lasner
James H. Marrow ★ Louise S. Marshall ★ Leonard L. Milberg
Elisabeth Morgan ★ Paul Needham ★ Carol N. Rigolot
Dale Roylanse ★ Anita Schorsch ★ Terry Seymour
Denis B. Woodfield ★ Daniel Woodward

2005–2008
Douglas F. Bauer ★ Ronald A. Brown
Alfred L. Bush ★ G. Scott Clemons ★ Eugene S. Flamm
Wanda Gunning ★ Jill E. Guthrie ★ Jamie Kleinberg Kamph
Joshua Katz ★ Patricia H. Marks
A. Perry Morgan Jr. ★ John Raasweiler ★ Robert J. Ruben
Ronald Smeltzer ★ Bruce C. Willie

HONORARY MEMBERS
Lloyd Cotsen ★ Nancy S. Klah
William H. Scheid ★ Shirley M. Tilghman
CONTENTS

The Western Man in the Eastern Parlor: Alfred Bush and the Princeton Collections of Western Americana  page 221
   Stephen Aron

A Zapotec Carved Bone  225
   John M. D. Pohl and Javier Urcid Serrano

Brand Books in the Princeton Collections of Western Americana  237
   William S. Reese

A Native Among the Headhunters 252
   Ann Fabian

A Stereoscopic View of the American West 271
   Martha A. Sandweiss

Photographs of the 1862 Sioux Revolt: From National Sensation to Ethnographic Documentation 290
   Heather A. Shannon

The Making of Edward S. Curtis’s The North American Indian 314
   Mick Gidley

A Witness at Wounded Knee, 1973 330
   Owen Luck
Full Circle: From Disintegration to Revitalization of Otterskin Bag Use in Great Lakes Tribal Culture 359
Anton Treuer

The Association on American Indian Affairs and the Struggle for Native American Rights, 1948–1955 366
Paul C. Rosier

Indian Politics in Cold War America: Parallel and Contradiction 392
Daniel M. Cobb

Otterskins, Eagle Feathers, and Native American Alumni at Princeton 420
Alfred L. Bush

Library Notes
Gardner's Photographic Sketch Book of the War 435
Julie L. Mellby

New and Notable 441

Friends of the Library 488

Cover Note 497
Alfred L. Bush
ILLUSTRATIONS

Zapotec engraved bone  page 226
Confederacies of Mesoamerica’s Late Postclassic period  227
Zapotec and Nahuatl calendar signs and names  230
Drawings of the Princeton Zapotec bone  231
Bones from Tomb 7 at Monte Albán, Mexico  233
Day signs carved on a manatee mandible  235
A sixteenth-century Italian horse brand  239
A nineteenth-century cattle brand book from Argentina  241
Examples of nineteenth-century Spanish brands  243
First page of the “Deseret Brand Book”  245
Entries from the brand book for Hill County, Texas  247
Examples of brands from the Cherokee Strip  249
Brand book of the Kansas Frontier Stock Association  250
A Flathead skull from Crania Americana  253
“Stum-Ma-Nu: A Flat-Head Boy”  257
A Flathead cradle  264
Timothy O’Sullivan, “Ruins in Cañon de Chelle, N.M.”  273
Verso of O’Sullivan, “Ruins in Cañon de Chelle, N.M.”  277
Richard Kern, “Ruins of an Old Pueblo in the Cañon of Chelly”  280
Timothy O’Sullivan, “Ruins in the Cañon de Chelle, New Mexico”  283
Adrian J. Ebell, “Squaws Guarding Corn from Blackbirds”  293
Adrian J. Ebell, “People Escaping from the Indian Massacre of 1862” 294
Adrian J. Ebell, “The Breakfast on the Prairie” 295
Joel E. Whitney, “Cut Nose” 297
Joel E. Whitney, “Paha Uza-Tanka” 297
Joel E. Whitney, “Portraits of Indians Connected with the Minnesota Massacre” 298
Joel E. Whitney, “Te-Na-Se-Pa” 299
Joel E. Whitney, “One of the Executed Indians” 299
Benjamin Franklin Upton, “Sioux Captives” 301
Benjamin Franklin Upton, “Wowinape, Little Crow’s Son” 302
Benjamin Franklin Upton, “Fort Snelling” 303
Joel E. Whitney, “Sha-Kpe” 305
Benjamin Franklin Upton, portrait of Little Six 305
Joel E. Whitney, “Ta-Tanka-Nazin” 307
Joel E. Whitney, reissued portrait of Ta-Tanka-Nazin 307
Joel E. Whitney, portrait of Medicine Bottle 307
Leaf from Photographs of North American Indians 310–11
Edward S. Curtis, “Navaho Medicine Man” 321
Edward S. Curtis, “Ta’thámiche—Walapai” 323
Edward S. Curtis, “A Drink in the Desert—Navaho” 325
Publication outline for The North American Indian 327
Owen Luck, Demonstration outside the Bureau of Indian Affairs building, Pine Ridge 333
Owen Luck, U.S. Marshals and FBI agents at a roadblock 335
Owen Luck, Elders gathering at Wounded Knee 336
Owen Luck, Defensive fortifications 337
Owen Luck, A ceremony at Wounded Knee 338
Owen Luck, Leonard Crow Dog lights the pipe 341
Owen Luck, Frank Fools Crow offers the pipe 342
Owen Luck, Honoring the first man shot at Wounded Knee 343
Owen Luck, Frank Fools Crow prays with the pipe 344
Owen Luck, Lakota security at a roadblock 349
Owen Luck, An FBI roadblock 351
Owen Luck, Frank Fools Crow at home in Kyle 353
Owen Luck, Tom Bad Cob outside the Rapid City Jail 356
An otterskin “woompa” bag 358
Details of beadwork on the “woompa” bag 360, 361
Logo of the Association on American Indian Affairs 367
Oliver La Farge 372
Felix S. Cohen 373
Alexander Lesser, Oliver La Farge, and Richard D. Searles 384
“American Indians Protect You!” 395
Oliver La Farge 397
The American Indian Point IV Program 402
LaVerne Madigan 404
An otterskin bookbinding 423
An eagle feather headdress 425
Fred Fitch adopted by the Sioux 426
White Roots of Peace Teepee 431
American Indian students on the steps of Whig Hall 432
Kevin Gover receiving an honorary degree 434
David Knox, “Field Telegraph Battery Wagon” 439
Yoshitoshi Tsukioka, Portrait of a Geisha Seated for Her Photographic Portrait 449
Seventeenth-century needlework patterns 453
Thomas Conder, “York Town, and Gloucester Point, as Besieged by the Allied Army” 456
Ananda K. Coomaraswamy 459
Sketch by Lady Elizabeth Butler 467
Gold ducat of Dorino Gattilusio 479
William Temple Allen, sketch of Nassau Hall 481
The martyrdom of St. Thomas à Becket 484
A Chinese official, 1928 487
Karin Trainer with outgoing Friends officers 494
CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

STEPHEN ARON is Professor of History at UCLA and Executive Director of the Institute for the Study of the American West at the Autry National Center, Los Angeles. Among his many publications are How the West Was Lost: The Transformation of Kentucky from Daniel Boone to Henry Clay (1996) and American Confluence: The Missouri Frontier from Borderland to Border State (2005).

DANIEL M. COBB is Assistant Professor of History at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, and former Assistant Director of the D’Arcy McNickle Center for American Indian History at the Newberry Library in Chicago. His first book, Before Red Power: American Indians & the Politics of Tribal Self-Determination, 1960–1968, is forthcoming from the University Press of Kansas.

ANN FABIAN teaches American Studies and History at Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey, in New Brunswick. She is the author of Card Sharps, Dream Books, and Bucket Shops: Gambling in Nineteenth-Century America (1990) and The Unvarnished Truth (2000), a study of personal narrative. She is working on a book on skull collectors.
Mick Gidley holds the Chair of American Literature at the University of Leeds, England. In 2005 he was the William Robertson Coe Distinguished Visiting Professor of American Studies at the University of Wyoming. He has published widely in American literary and cultural history, most recently Edward S. Curtis and the North American Indian Project in the Field (2003). Currently, he is completing a study of the little-known photographer Emil Otto Hoppé.

Owen Luck is a working photographer whose images are in the collections of the Princeton University Library and Yale University Library. His current project concerns the Makah people of Neah Bay in Washington State.

Julie L. Mellby is the Curator of Graphic Arts in Princeton University Library’s Department of Rare Books and Special Collections. Before coming to Princeton, she was curator of works on paper for the Toledo Museum of Art and associate curator of graphic arts for the Houghton Library, Harvard University. Recent publications include Splendid Pages: The Molly and Walter Bareiss Collection of Modern Illustrated Books (2003).

John M. D. Pohl is the Peter Jay Sharp Curator and Lecturer in the Art of the Ancient Americas, Princeton University Art Museum. An eminent authority on North American Indian civilizations, he has directed numerous archaeological excavations and surveys in Canada, the United States, Mexico, and Central America as well as Europe. His many books and articles on the ancient civilizations of Mesoamerica include Exploring Mesoamerica (1999) and The Legend of Lord Eight Deer: An Epic of Ancient Mexico (2002).

William S. Reese is an antiquarian bookseller in New Haven, Connecticut, specializing in Americana, travel, and natural history. He is an authority on nineteenth-century American color-plate books and the author of articles and exhibition catalogs on early American imprints and the American West.

Paul C. Rosier is Assistant Professor of History at Villanova University, where he teaches Native American history, American environmental history, American women’s history, and

Martha A. Sandweiss is Professor of American Studies and History at Amherst College, where she teaches Western American history, public history, and visual culture. She has a particular interest in how visual images can serve as historical documents. Her most recent book, Print the Legend: Photography and the American West (2002), has won many awards, including the 2002 Ray Allen Billington Prize from the Organization of American Historians for the best book in American frontier history.

Heather A. Shannon is a project cataloger in the Cotsen Children’s Library of the Princeton University Library. From September 2004 to January 2006, she cataloged almost 7,000 individual photographs, photograph albums, and photograph collections housed in the Princeton Collections of Western Americana.

Anton Treuer (Princeton Class of 1991), a member of the Leech Lake band of Ojibwe, is Associate Professor of Ojibwe and director of the Ojibwe language program at Bemidji State University in Minnesota. He is editor of the only academic journal on the Ojibwe language, Oshkaabewis Native Journal, and has published Living Our Language: Ojibwe Tales & Oral Histories (2001) and Omaa Akiing (2002), an Ojibwe-language collection of tales from Leech Lake elders.

Javier Urcid is an anthropological archaeologist interested in the role of ancient literacy on the formation and maintenance of social complexity, in modeling the origins and alternative developments of writing systems, and in methods of semantic and phonetic decipherment of extinct scripts. His main research focuses on Mesoamerican scribal traditions. His work on Otomanguean scripts (500 B.C.E.–1600 C.E.) includes Zapotec Hieroglyphic Writing (2001).
An otterskin “woompa” bag of the type used in Ojibwe midewiwin ceremonies. Princeton Collections of Western Americana, Department of Rare Books and Special Collections, Princeton University Library. Gift of Mrs. Lawrence Hogue.
From Disintegration to Revitalization of Otterskin Bag Use in Great Lakes Tribal Culture

Anton Treuer

Otterskin bags, like the “woompa” bag in the Princeton University Library’s Western Americana collection, have a long and storied use in Great Lakes tribal cultures, especially among the Ojibwe. Their use has been primarily vested in the medicine dance ceremony, called midewiwin. Although the bag in Princeton’s collection has a geometric beadwork design and could be of Ojibwe, Ottawa, Potowatomi, Menomini, Dakota, or even Ho-Chunk (Winnebago) manufacture, most of the otterskin bags acquired by museums and those still in use today were made from skins trapped and decorated by the Ojibwe Indians of the central and western Great Lakes region.

Early references to the midewiwin society in the journals and documents of French and British explorers, traders, and missionaries suggest that the ceremony had its genesis prior to the arrival of whites in the region. Some scholars, such as Harold Hickerson, have argued

1 The “woompa” bag in Princeton’s collection was once owned by Ramsay Crooks (1786–1859), a partner of John Jacob Astor and the founder of Astoria. He may have acquired the bag while working as an Indian trader in the Sault Ste. Marie area. It was the gift of the family of Lawrence Hoguet, Crooks’s great-great-grandson. A similar “Mide-society medicine bundle, of otter pelt” was acquired by the Ethnological Museum of Berlin in 1846. See Peter Bolz and Hans-Ulrich Sanner, Native American Art: The Collections of the Ethnological Museum Berlin (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1999), 60.

Details of the beadwork on Princeton’s “woompa” bag.
that midewiwin originated after contact with Europeans; but these assertions are suspect for three reasons. First, Hickerson was writing for the Indian Claims Commission, established by Congress in 1946 to hear tribal cases against the federal government concerning ceded lands and monetary reparations. Historical briefs were used to support the government’s contention that various Indian groups had only recent and therefore limited use of the lands they claimed, and thus deserved only minimal compensation. Second, if midewiwin was a new ceremony, we would expect early missionaries to have expressed great concern over the creation of a society that drew new and potential converts away from the faith. The advent of other religious societies after European contact, such as the Ghost Dance, received much attention. Yet there are no references to the creation of midewiwin in European missionary or explorer texts. Third, and most important, the tribal cultures of the Great Lakes, in their own oral histories, place the creation of midewiwin at a very early time, prior to contact with Europeans.

Nearly every tribe in the central and western Great Lakes region actively participated in midewiwin throughout the entire fur trade era and the early reservation period. In the eastern and central Great Lakes and in some of the northern reaches of Canada, where early Catholic (especially Jesuit) missionaries had notable success in converting significant portions of the native population to Christianity, most of the early mission work was done in tribal languages. Therefore, cultural loss was not accompanied by loss of language and oral history. Places like Wiikwemikong on Manitoulin Island, Ontario, for example, have relatively high fluency rates even today, but no active practice of midewiwin in many decades.

Surprisingly, the midewiwin and other Ojibwe societies and religious ceremonies remained vibrant well into the twentieth century, despite persistent government efforts at assimilation. Every major Ojibwe community had at least one active lodge. It was not until after World War II that most of the lodges in the upper Midwest started to fold. Today there are still several active lodges, primarily in Minnesota and Wisconsin, and all traditional practitioners travel to those places in order to participate.

Understanding the process that led to erosion of traditional Ojibwe religious societies is important, both for providing direction to Ojibwe people in the future and for evaluating the history and integrity of French, British, and American government policies, past and present. Although the most dramatic and obvious decline in traditional religious societies of the Great Lakes Ojibwe took place around World War II, the source of that decline can be traced to the earlier missionary and assimilation programs devised and supported by the governments of the United States and Britain/Canada. Although missionary efforts have been constant, and their effect is clear, it was the educational initiatives that had the greater negative impact on tribal cultures.

Captain Richard Henry Pratt, superintendent of the first residential boarding school for Indians in the United States, established at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1879, summed up the idea behind the policy when he said, “Our goal is to kill the Indian in order to save the man.” The schools were in fact designed for exactly that purpose. Students spent half of the day working at hard labor and the other half receiving an English-language-only education. Punishment for use of tribal languages was often severe. Conditions were so harsh and rigid at the boarding schools that many students died, and many more suffered from various diseases, such as trachoma and tuberculosis. Some of the schools, like Carlisle and the Haskell Institute in Lawrence, Kansas, kept their own cemeteries.

In some families, as many as three generations were sent to the residential boarding schools, and the effects were pronounced. The erosion of tribal languages in North America can be directly attributed to the sustained assault of America’s Indian education policies. In addition, tribal family structure and health were damaged. Most people learn how to be parents from their experiences as children. When children were confined in unnurturing, military-style boarding schools, they lost the chance to inherit parenting skills from their extended families. Regardless of how well-educated these children became about the English language and the history of the United States and Europe, they knew nothing about how to get along in the world.

socially. The widespread patterns of social dysfunction so typical in most Native communities today can be directly attributed to boarding school policies.

Often, when children graduated from the boarding schools, they could not find economic opportunities in Euro-American society. So they returned home, only to confront the fact that they could not recognize their own parents and could not speak their language. With the attendant feelings of dislocation and hopelessness came abuse of alcohol and inability to integrate into any family or society. Participation in and understanding of traditional religious culture and society dwindled as the social, physical, and spiritual health of the community declined.

Assimilation policies did not stop there, of course. The U.S. government continued to pursue assimilation and integration of native peoples on a political level, funding relocation programs to move as many people as possible from rural reservation lands to urban areas. There too, Indians found few economic opportunities, greater dysfunction, and dislocation from tribal cultures.

John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs from 1933 to 1945, brought many changes to Indian Country, including the crucial end to the policy of allotment (by which tribal lands were privatized and made available for sale to non-Indians) and a slow dismantling of the boarding school system as Indian America’s dominant educational paradigm. However, the seeds of assimilation had been sewn deeply, and the escalating domination of the English language and church religion continued. These effects became most manifest, ironically, when things started to change. When the sense of loss was combined with the empowering sentiment for self-determination at the heart of the civil rights movement of the 1970s, with its attendant respect for cultural differences, the stage was set for a genuine revival of Native traditions.

While attitudes in Washington, D.C., continue to swing between assimilation and self-determination, some important developments have occurred in the Indian communities of North America. Most notable is a growing awareness and appreciation of the importance of tribal languages as the bearers of culture and spiritual opportunities. Several midewiwin lodges, including those still active today at Bad River, Wisconsin, and Lake Lena, Minnesota, revitalized their societies and resumed their ceremonies. The number of participants there and in other communities with active lodges has increased. And along with growing participation in traditional societies like midewiwin has come an accelerating demand for the sacred items whose use is vested in those ceremonies. Such is the case with otterskin bags like the one in Princeton’s collection.

With the resurgence of traditional Ojibwe societies has come a greater interest in cultural and academic understanding of these practices within and outside Ojibwe communities. There have also been renewed calls for repatriation of sacred artifacts associated with them. Otterskin bags like the one at Princeton still have a role to play in advancing our understanding of the Great Lakes people, culture, and spiritual revitalization.